Good Morning,

I trust that you are enjoying the break in the weather. Once again, my theory is proving right as we see this change from miserably wet and cold weather to gloriously rich and increasingly warm sunshine. In the years of my time at University, this was the time of year that we all had to justify our work over the previous year by passing the exams and the time we were looking to spend the most time indoors reading up and prepping for exams was the time when the weather was at its most glorious at times. Something I could never do was study outside, but many could and they would often sit in the grounds of the university or at the Botanic Gardens or Kelvingrove Park.

I mention this because there are so many under pressure this coming week and for the rest of May, Those in School sitting their Nat 5's or Highers, as well as those in colleges and universities, for some there will be the additional pressure/prize of graduation at the end.

There will be so much expectation felt by so many young folk and we should remember them particularly in prayer in these coming weeks seeking that they might know God's hand upon them no matter what the end results might be. Of course that's the story for all of us this week as we go about our everyday routine or otherwise.

With best wishes

Calum D. Macdonald
